LOUISVILLE.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1855.

The WASHINGTON UNION ON LORD ELGIN.—The organ is exposing itself to the ridicule of sensible people by a silly and petulant onslaught upon Lord Elgin.

He spent his days in Scotland, in which his Lordship committed the striking decisiveness of referring to the unpopularity of the Pierce Administration by way of illustrating a political argument.

Lord Elgin, it seems, having returned to his native land after a protracted absence in the foreign service of the United States, was enthusiastically received by his old friends and neighbors.

Of course a profusion of toasts were enthusiastically drunk, and a volley of speeches were delivered, among which the effort of his Lordship was certainly the least eloquent or eloquent.

In the course of his remarks, Lord Elgin made several hand-some allusions to the kindness of our countrymen in this country, and paid very great tribute to the decisiveness of our constitution and to the character of our people. But he assured his Scotch audience (very sincerely, we have no doubt) that he had returned to his native country to become a law.

That he might fight there were others.
